

Get on Board for More Housing Choice Around Parkville Station

Equitable transit-oriented communities are mixed-use neighborhoods with an array of housing options (including affordable homes), near train stations or CTfastrak stations.

Inherently Affordable • Environmentally Sustainable • Capitalize on Existing Assets

Who Benefits from Equitable Transit-Oriented Communities?

WORKERS & EMPLOYERS:

- Reduce commute times and transportation costs by using transit instead of cars
- Have more reliable schedules
- Get more customers through foot traffic from new residents

HOME-SEEKERS:

- Have more choices of where to live
- Can live closer to work, shops, and restaurants
- Walk and exercise more, improving overall health

TOWNS AS A WHOLE:

- Expand the grand list and increase tax revenues
- Keep essential workers close by
- Reduce per-unit infrastructure expenses because units are near existing infrastructure

Hartford's Current Zoning Landscape

Where 4+ Family Housing Is Allowed (in purple)

Hartford's zoning code already allows some 4+ family housing around its train stations. In fact, the city leads regionally in allowing multi-family housing near transit stations as of right.

However, Hartford zoning officials can create even more opportunities for multi-family housing near transit. By modernizing the city's zoning code and removing unnecessary mandates like minimum parking mandates, Hartford can become an even better model for transit-oriented development across the state.

Curious about parking? Eliminating minimum parking mandates would:

- Reduce our dependency on single occupancy vehicles
- Reduce housing costs and allow over 100,000 housing units to be built citywide
- Decrease our carbon footprint and traffic congestion
